Protecting Your Environment

The Alamo Resource Conservation and Development (RC&D) Area, Inc. is a nonprofit organization whose members are concerned with maintaining a clean healthy environment. Through numerous grants, the organization has established awareness programs to provide an understanding of the potential damage to property and lives by floods, water conservation, non-point source pollution, new agricultural technology, land stewardship and soil conservation.

With these grants, homeowners with limited income, living in rural communities were assisted in upgrading their failing septic systems. Through the upgrade of these systems, you have a reduction of pollutants in the soil, air and water and improvement of the quality of your water. Various other conservation workshops and projects have resulted in the reduction of pollutants entering the environment, improvement of banks along creeks and rivers, and improvement of water conservation measures and water quality.

Additional information is available by contacting the office at (210) 735-3391 or alamorcd@sbcglobal.net or by visiting our website at <http://www.alamorcd.org>. The Alamo RC&D Area serves individuals and communities in Atascosa, Bandera, Bexar, Comal, Frio, Guadalupe, Kendall, Kerr, Medina and Wilson counties.

The Alamo RC&D Area is supported by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) and is an equal opportunity provider and employer.
